The Journey through my eyes

Presenter: Dr Balindiwi Sishi

Date: Monday, 24 August

Time: 16:00 – 17:00

If you love what you are doing (studying), you may want to continue your studies. In fact, having a passion for your subject is possibly the best reason to go into postgraduate studies, as long as you have a sensible idea of where it might lead you professionally once you have completed. If you aspire on a career in academia, it is essential to undertake a masters/PhD program, and a strong interest in pursuing research would be an asset.

If you have agreed to any of these sentiments, then this webinar is for you. Moreover, it will be ALL about you, and whether the postgraduate journey is for you. Postgraduate programs are immensely demanding, require some sacrifice and are at times fast-paced. While all undergraduates/honors are necessary for this milestone, you need to be sure that you are capable of undertaking another year, or more, of study. Research programs can take up to two years full-time and require passion, lots of self-discipline and self motivation, so have you got those skills? In this webinar, I will share some of my experiences of my postgraduate journey AND share the recipe for a Nobel Prize.
