Programme Structure

The MPhil (Violent Histories and Repair) is an interdisciplinary programme that engages critical decolonial approaches to study the legacies of violent histories. It takes an intersectional approach to examining the structural aspects of systemic violence, which includes its racial and gendered dimensions, as well as the more insidious and symbolic forms of its expression that are embedded in institutional cultures and practices. The programme focuses on violent histories, intergenerational trauma, and repair. There are three compulsory theoretical modules and a research methodology module aimed at strengthening your research capacity for the thesis.

Duration of Programme

The programme extends over a minimum of one academic year.

Postgraduate Programmes

For more information on the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences' postgraduate programmes, consult the University's Postgraduate Prospectus or the various departmental websites.

1. Recognition of Prior Learning (RPL)

Special admission to the postgraduate programmes in the Faculty is available to you if you:

- were denied opportunities to formal learning environments earlier because of systemic or other limitations, but you can demonstrate that you can now participate at a particular level in such learning opportunities; or
- can receive retrospective recognition for them.

If you do not have a Bachelor's degree, you must follow the Recognition of Prior Learning (RPL) procedure for admission to a postgraduate diploma, Honours, MPhil or MA programme. Not all departments have the possibility of admission by means of the RPL procedure. A Bachelor's degree awarded by a university of technology or a private provider of higher education will be recognised only if your degree is registered with the South African Qualifications Authority (SAQA) on the same level as the required university qualification.

Please note: It remains the responsibility of a Department to establish if your existing qualification is up to standard.

More details of the Faculty's RPL procedure are available from the Faculty Administrator, Arts and Social Sciences, in the Admin A building.
